I was invited to read my book TWO LITTLE BOYS FROM TOOLITTLE TOYS at the Mount Sinai Kravis Children's Hospital on the Upper East Side of New York City. I did not know what to expect. Sally Cook, from Project Sunshine who set the visit up, insisted that I would be impressed with the facilities and staff. Was she ever right!

There is an actual television studio set up in a play area of the hospital called the KidZone. There I met Alayna M. Kramer (seen in the pictures above), who is the dynamic Producer of KidZoneTV. She explained that I would read my book and then she would interview me. A program would be put together in post production that would be played in the rooms of children throughout the hospital. What a brilliant idea! The interview was a blast! We spoke about my adventures that lead me to become an author and illustrator of picture books. In the process, some of my 3D creatures got to make their own television debuts!

Here are a few pictures from the visit.
